

A KNIGHTS PARTY INVITE - LINO PRINTING

FEBRUARY 24, 2012

For Christmas my thoughtful husband gave me a set of lino cutting tools and some card-size sheets of linoleum. Do you remember linoleum cutting from when you were a kid? The smell of linoleum brought me right back to the craft room of my primary school in the countryside - amazing, the memories smells can bring back to you.

With Pim's 5th birthday fast approaching I had good reason to make a stamp: the party invites! Pim had been requesting a knights party, so I asked him to draw a knight for me. I transferred his knight to the piece of linoleum - you can trace the drawing on tracing paper using a soft pencil, put it face down on the linoleum and rub so the drawing transfers on the stamp, or use old-fashioned carbon paper (another thing from the past).

After having cut out the stamp, which takes a bit of time but is extremely relaxing, you can ink the drawing using block printing ink and a little roller, and press down on a piece of paper. A rolling pin works well to press the stamp down evenly. Carefully lift the lino up and let dry. Done!!

You can also print on fabric using fabric paint - the possibilities are endless...

That was fun! And I already know how I'm going to decorate the party bags!!

xxx Esther

Category: Birthdays and parties, Crafts, Crafts, For Kids, For Mums

---

ESTHER IN AMSTERDAM | 9 COMMENTS

---