

LANDMADE, FOR SIMPLE HOUSEHOLD ITEMS FROM FRANCE

OCTOBER 2, 2012

One of the many advantages of living in a relatively small flat in Paris is that my storage space is limited, which in turn means that I don't accumulate a lot of useless stuff. (BTW, this actually goes completely against my nature, so it has been an 'interesting' learning curve - to learn to think hard before buying!). Basically I have been trying to stick to quality rather than quantity.

I love, love, love this French website I discovered recently as it sells simple household items that have been around for generations and have one thing in common: quality. Most of the items are French-made or from neighbouring countries. Every single thing on the website has a story and is guaranteed to be useful for a very long time. Here are some of my favourites: the great Durelex glasses I wrote about a while ago, the cast iron "cocotte", the swipping pan that actually looks nice just hanging in the kitchen.

My other favourite is the chestnut chair which is made in my region, the Limousin, so I have a little sentimental attachment to it! Unfortunately the website is only in French at the moment, but it is pretty easy to navigate, especially with google translator.

- Emilie

Category: Décor, Food, Home, Housekeeping, Kitchen, Utensils

---

EMILIE IN PARIS | 8 COMMENTS

---