

CINEMA FESTIVAL

JULY 1, 2009

Sometimes I get fed up of living in the centre of a big city.

The traffic, the pollution the lack of green space, and space in general seems so much more oppressing in the summer time. But then I get reminded of the big advantages of city life: the huge range of cultural events right at my fingertips. From the 2nd to the 14th of July the Paris Film Festival is on and part of the festival is a great children's program.

This year the focus is on my favourite pet subject, animation. Lots of things are on offer: workshops, lectures and, of course film screenings. The first public screening in France of the new Pixar 3D extravaganza "Up" is on offer, as are modern day classics like Wallace and Gromit and Disney's 1963 "The Swords in the Stone". The films are for kids aged 3 and up, and there are so many choices that it should satisfy all tastes. You can check out the program here.

I guess city life is not so bad after all...

- Emilie

Category: Cities,Cultural,Films and Music,For Kids,Indoor Activities,Music, Films & Apps,Paris

EMILIE IN PARIS | NO COMMENTS
