

BABYCCINO KIDS blog

daily inspiration for the modern family

BOON FROG POD

MAY 11, 2011

Have you recently taken a close look at your baths toys? My husband is mostly the one bathing our kids, but last week I happened to be the one scooping the toys out of the bath. Two comments:

1. Where does that black residue on and in the bath toys comes from? Is that mould???
2. How come my husband doesn't take notice of the fact that the toys are dirty when he's the one storing them away every evening? (Let's just ignore this point.)

Time for action. I carefully washed the toys that could be saved, and tossed the ones that couldn't. Then I got myself a Boon Frog Pod, partly because I always thought it looked so cool, and partly because (I hope) it is now easier for my husband to rinse all of the toys after bath time.

So far, so good. The frog is super easy to install, and looks super cool in our bathroom. It stores away all of the toys, and it also has a very handy shelf for the baby bubbles and shampoo. And no mould yet!

xxx Esther

PS Do you have tips on good bath toys? I think our kids' favourite ones are the old-fashioned stacking cups!

Category: Equipment, For Kids, For Mums, Home, Storage

ESTHER IN AMSTERDAM | 12 COMMENTS
