

HEART ORIGAMI NOTEPAPER FROM LOLLIPOP

FEBRUARY 10, 2014

As a young child, growing up in America, we would hand out Valentine cards to every child in our class. We used to create our own Valentine's Day letterboxes and tape them to our desks and everyone would go around sticking the Valentine cards into them. I remember taking home all of my Valentines cards and reading them at home (and eating the candy too!). I was talking to my husband about this and he also used to do this in class, so I'm assuming it's an American thing? Children here in the UK (or at least in my children's school) don't do this. In fact, I don't think my kids have ever gotten a Valentine's Day card from one of their classmates?!

When I saw these Heart Origami Notes from Lollipop it reminded me all about this. And I think it's a fun tradition to bring back for my kids. Maybe not to all their classmates at school, but to special friends or family members they might want to send some hearts to!

xx Courtney

Category: Books & Paper, For Kids, Holiday

COURTNEY IN LONDON | 6 COMMENTS
